

Would have, Could have, Should have

Modal verbs are an unavoidable part of English grammar. We use them to express modality – ability, likelihood, advice, order, suggestion, capacity, permission, request, and obligation.

In today's lesson, we will look at some modal verbs in the past. As a rule, they express our present feelings about our past actions.

The structure we use to express it is:

WOULD/COULD/SHOULD + HAVE + PAST PARTICIPLE

WOULD HAVE + PAST PARTICIPLE

You probably find this construction familiar from the third conditional. It is about an unreal situation that didn't happen. In most cases, it expresses regret.

For example:

- If I had known you were in the hospital, I would have visited you. (but I didn't know and I didn't visit you.)
- I would have prepared a bigger meal if I had known you were coming. (but I didn't know and I didn't prepare it).
- John would have passed the exam if he had studied harder. (but he didn't study so he couldn't pass his exam).

You can also use would have + past participle to talk about something you wanted to do but for some reason but you didn't. Here, the sentence other than would have + past participle is in the Past Simple Tense.

For example:

- I would have gone to Martha's birthday party but I had to study for my exam. (I wanted to go to the party but I didn't)
- Sam would have picked you up but her car broke down. (She wanted to pick them up but she couldn't).
- They would have gone clubbing with us last night but they had guests around. (They wanted to go clubbing but they couldn't).

COULD HAVE + PAST PARTICIPLE

Could have means that something might have happened in the past but it didn't. These sentences usually contain regret.

Look at these examples:

- We could have got married and had a family of our own. (but they didn't get married).
- I could have graduated from college but I left it and got a job instead.
- You could have been rich but you didn't work hard enough.

You can also use the construction could have + past participle to make an assumption about something that happened in the past.

For example:

- Where is my wallet? I could have left it in the car. (I might have left it in the car).
- "Why is the window open? The children could have opened it. (The children might have opened it).
- Can it be that Sam is late? He could have been stuck in the traffic. (Sam might have been stuck in the traffic).

Remember that couldn't have + past participle has the opposite meaning. It expresses something that couldn't have happened but it did.

For example:

- Where is Kevin? He couldn't have forgotten about our arrangement. (It is unlikely that he forgot but he did).
- Pamela couldn't have arrived any earlier because of the traffic. (she planned to be on time but because of the traffic she wasn't).
- I couldn't have called you because I lost my phone. (I wanted to call you but I lost my phone).

SHOULD HAVE + PAST PARTICIPLE

The modal verb should is normally used to give advice or recommendation. However, when used in the past, it becomes complaining or regrets.

Look at these sentences:

- I should have gone to bed earlier. Now I'm sleepy.
- You should have called me before you decided to go shopping.
- They should have called the police when they saw the car had been robbed.
- I should have listened to you. Now I'm sorry I didn't.

Shouldn't have + past participle means that something was a bad idea but it was done anyway.

For example:

- You shouldn't have gone without me (you should have called me)
- I shouldn't have stayed up so late. (now I'm tired)
- You shouldn't have drunk so much at the party. Who's going to drive us home now?
